

1. Why is the poem humorous?

Answer: The poem is humorous because the poet suggests absurd and dangerous ways of identifying wild animals. The reader comes to know the animal's identity only when it attacks or kills the victim, creating irony and humour.

2. How can a leopard be recognized?

Answer: A leopard can be recognized by its spotted skin. According to the poet, once it leaps on a person and attacks repeatedly, one can be sure that it is a leopard.

3. What does the poet suggest about wild animals?

Answer: The poet suggests that wild animals are dangerous creatures. However, instead of describing them seriously, she presents their characteristics in a funny and entertaining manner.

4. Describe the humour and irony in the poem.

Answer: The poem is full of humour and irony. The poet pretends to teach readers how to identify wild animals, but the methods she suggests are impractical and dangerous. A person recognizes the lion when it roars while attacking, the tiger when it eats him, and the leopard when it leaps on him repeatedly. Such situations are ironic because the knowledge comes too late to be useful. The exaggeration and absurdity make the poem amusing and memorable.

5. What message does the poem convey?

Answer: The poem primarily aims to entertain rather than teach. Through humour and irony, the poet presents the characteristics of different wild animals. The poem also highlights the power and danger of wild creatures while encouraging readers to appreciate nature with a sense of fun. The light-hearted treatment of a serious subject makes the poem enjoyable and interesting.
